A regulator's current rules are the sediment of its past decisions, and nowhere is this truer than in Singapore's treatment of digital assets. The retail restrictions of 2024 are the answer to the collapses of 2022. The overseas-only licensing regime of 2025 is the answer to a reputational problem that first surfaced in 2021. The stablecoin framework of 2023 is the answer to a monetary question MAS had been asking since its first experiments with a tokenised Singapore dollar in 2016. A practitioner who knows the sequence can predict how MAS will react to the next event. A founder who knows it can avoid proposing in 2026 what MAS rejected in 2022. This chapter tells the story in six phases and closes with the state of the law at 30 June 2026.
